Biography and Crucial Artworks

In 2017, Cirio coined the term Evidentiary Realism which took form in a curated group show at Fridman Gallery in New York City. Evidentiary Realism featured artists engaged in investigative, forensic, and documentary art. It aimed to articulate a particular form of realism in art that portrays and reveals evidence from complex social systems. The show included fourteen historical, established, and emerging artists, including works by Hans Haacke, Mark Lombardi, and Harun Farocki. The show prioritized formal aspects of visual language and mediums with strong references to art history. In addition to the show, Cirio developed essays and public conversations around this form of realism in contemporary art.

In 2016, Cirio created the project Obscurity in which he obfuscated over 10 million online mugshots and the criminal records of victims of mass incarceration in United States. The project addressed the unregulated mugshot publishing industry, which anonymous Internet companies often exploit for shaming people who have been arrested regardless of their charges and trial verdicts. Cirio cloned over six mugshot websites, blurred millions of mugshots, and shuffled names listed. In response he received support from victims of mugshot extortion, and he was subject to legal threats from both Mugshots.com, an anonymous company in Nevis and US Data Ltd., a Texan firm that owns a few mugshot websites. With Obscurity, Cirio questioned the controversial Right to Be Forgotten law, which has been opposed by major search engine companies in the U.S. Ultimately, he designed the Right to Remove campaign to introduce an Internet privacy policy for adapting the Right to Be Forgotten to the United States. The Obscurity artwork has been shown at MIT Museum in Boston, AEC Museum in Linz, at the Big Brother Award in Amsterdam, and at Musée National d'Histoire et d'Art of Luxembourg.

In early 2015, Cirio addressed Edward Snowden's revelations of U.S. worldwide mass surveillance programs. His research exposed unauthorized photos of nine high-ranking U.S. intelligence officials accountable for secretive surveillance and over-classified intelligence programs. Overexposed took the form of a street art campaign in which photos of the U.S. intelligence were disseminated on public walls in NYC, London, Berlin, and Paris. The appropriated images were taken from acquaintances or civilians who posted photos onto Internet platforms without the control of the officials. The project satirized ubiquitous surveillance and overly-mediated political personas, while highlighting new modes of circulation of images and boundaries of privacy and transparency in relation to civil rights, political accountability, and forms of public shaming. The photos were reproduced with a particular technique called High Definition Stencils invented by Cirio. After the campaign, the project inspired a series of formal pop art paintings as iconic portraits of historical cyberwar figures. The project received large media coverage with features in mainstream outlets in Germany and internationally. Overexposed has been shown in international museums of photography such as ICP Museum, NYC, and Centre de la Photographie, Geneva in 2016 and C/O Berlin in 2017.

In 2014 Cirio researched the idea of economic and social structures as material for his work. With the project Daily Paywall, he created his own financial newspaper by assembling over 60,000 news articles taken by hacking the paywalls of the Financial Times, The Wall Street Journal, and The Economist. For the online and printed version of Daily Paywall, Cirio conceived a provocative economic model where readers could receive payment for responding to quizzes about featured articles, and journalists could claim compensation for their writing through funds available from crowdfunding donations. The project explored the notion of piracy, sharing, and information economy for a creative form of distribution of crucial information for educational means. The performance lasted five days, with hundreds of people who either participated in the model or debated its controversy on international media outlets. Ultimately DailyPaywall.com was taken down after a complaint of copyright infringement from Pearson PLC, which was the largest education and publishing company in the world. In 2016 Cirio republished the website DailyPaywall.com after Pearson PLC sold both The Economist and the Financial Times.

During 2014, Cirio also used financialization as material in the artworks (World Currency and Art Commodities) by adopting constructive and provocative approaches. (World Currency is a creative trading algorithm and equation that address the inherent instability and dominance of currencies with a new independent global reserve currency. With Art Commodities, Cirio began to investigate the art market to find potential alternatives for trading and collecting digital artworks that would establish democratic aesthetic values. With the 2014 project Global Direct, Cirio explored the idea of artistic creativity as it is applied to social and political science, giving new shape to the idea of utopian societies enabled by the potentials offered by the Internet. To illustrate the conceptual work about outlining a global participatory democracy, the artist drew a series of fifteen organograms informed by research that the artist conducted into the social science of modern and emergent governance. The research and video statements by philosophers and advocates of participatory democracy are integrated into the artwork to inspire the audience to think about alternative political frameworks. Global Direct has been shown at Artium Museum, Spain, 2016; Vancouver Art Gallery, 2015; and Biennale Cairo, 2015.

In 2013, Cirio investigated offshore financial systems with the project Loophole for All. He made public the list of all the companies registered in the Cayman Islands for the first time and exposed them by counterfeiting their Certificate of Incorporation, which he published on the website Loophole4All.com. Cirio invited international participation in the project by selling the identities of anonymous Cayman companies, a provocation that elicited reactions from Cayman authorities, local and international businesses, accounting firms, and global banks. After a few weeks of selling conceptual works in the form of limited editions of firms' identities, PayPal claimed the profit was garnered for an illegal activity, while the press was reporting on the online performance. In the following years, Cirio received several legal threats from companies forcing the removal of their names and certificates from the website Loophole4All.com. For the operation, Cirio set up his own company in the City of London and took advantage of other jurisdictions to shield personal liability. Ultimately, the artist interviewed major experts and produced a video documentary investigating offshore centers to expose their social costs and to envision solutions to global economic inequality. Loophole for All won the first prize of Prix Ars Electronica's award "Golden Nica of Interactive Art" in 2014 and has been exhibited in museums such as ZKM in Karlsruhe, Architectural Association in London, CCC Strozina in Florence, Museum for Applied Arts in Vienna, and Kasseler Kunstverein in Kassel.

Cirio started to work on critical finance in 2010, resulting in an artwork centered around counterfeited VISA credit cards and an alternative monetary policy called Gift Finance. Thousands of the illicit P2P Gift Credit Cards have been distributed worldwide by mail and public actions. Cirio has presented his theories on critical finance and Gift Finance through numerous lectures. In 2012, he was invited to curate a panel about alternative economic models for Creative Destruction, an exhibition organized by the Whitney Museum Independent Study Program that addressed the economic recession and the related Occupy Wall Street protests. He continued to curate panel discussions in 2013 with the series Performing Change. Organized at Eyebeam, the series was framed around an expanded notion of media performance art and included contributions by fourteen speakers, among them historical artists, pivotal social thinkers, and curators.

In 2012, with the projects Street Ghosts and Persecuting US, Cirio addressed the cultural shift in the perception of privacy and ownership of both public and personal information. Street Ghosts recontextualized photos of individuals found on Google Street View through interventions in public spaces of several global cities. The project generated worldwide attention from mainstream media, as well as specialist magazines devoted to architecture, design, art, and photography. With Persecuting US, Cirio profiled the political affiliations of over one million Americans who used Twitter during the 2012 Presidential Elections to raise awareness on voter profiling and polarization in social bubbles that can be targeted for political manipulation. In the 2011 project Face to Facebook, he initiated his research into Internet privacy by appropriating the data of over one million profiles of Facebook users worldwide and publishing 250,000 of them on a mock dating website sorted by their temperament guessed by artificial intelligence analyzing facial expressions. The project generated wide media attention and personal reactions, as well as a number of legal threats. Ultimately, Cirio defines Anti-Social Sculptures as performances involving random people in his works without their consent, a new transgressive art enabled by the introduction of pervasive unregulated technologies. Face to Facebook, Persecuting US, and Street Ghosts have been shown in museums worldwide.

Paolo Cirio completed his renowned Hacking Monopolism Trilogy in 2011, created in conjunction with Alessandro Ludovico and partially with Ubermorgen. The trilogy is composed of Face to Facebook, Amazon Noir (2006), and Google Will Eat Itself (2005). In these three artworks, Cirio exploited the technical and economic vulnerabilities of major Internet companies at the time of their expansion. The three artworks artistically reconfigured the way Internet giants concentrate, misappropriate, and monetize large quantities of public information and user interactions. These artworks have received several prizes and have been exhibited in major exhibitions around the world. In 2011, Face to Facebook won Prix Ars Electronica's "Award of Distinction of Interactive Art" in Linz, and in 2008 Amazon Noir won the second prize at the Transmediale festival in Berlin and first prize at Stuttgart Film festival. In 2011, the trilogy and Face to Facebook project were covered by over 1000 media outlets around the world including CNN, Apple daily HK, Fox News, Tagesschau, Spiegel, USA Today, The Independent, The New Age, and many other global mainstream media. A major installation of Hacking Monopolism Trilogy was shown at China Academy of Art, Hangzhou, in 2015.

Between 2008 and 2010 Cirio worked on a form of experimental storytelling with social aims, in which actors and audiences combine to present real facts through fictional personas using several media platforms and interventions. This form of immersive documentary fiction led to his theorization of a genre of transmedia called Recombinant Fiction, which took shape in the projects The Big Plot (2009) and Drowning NYC (2010). The first project was about a Russian alt-right political group infiltrating Western politics, and the second was about the social and economic impact of rising sea levels in Manhattan. He has presented his theory and related projects of this form of experimental participatory documentary fiction at the Courtauld Institute in London, Cornerhouse in Manchester, National Museum of Contemporary Art Athens, ISEA 2011, Rotterdam Film Festival, among many other media art events. Cirio also developed an in depth workshop program for teaching Tactical Transmedia Fiction that he led internationally.

In 2004, Cirio was an organizer and fundraiser of a series of street art exhibitions called Illegal Art Show. During these collective exhibitions, several artists converged to freely build and perform their works in public spaces without authorization. These kinds of art happenings were organized in London, Milan, and Turin. These exhibitions were often taken down by the local police. Hundreds of artists were involved and several media outlets covered the events. During these years he created several street art artworks that were installed across Europe between 2003 and 2005.

In August 2001, as a 22-year-old anti-militarism activist, he founded an international web portal with hundreds of news articles about the expansion of NATO and global campaigns against it. He personally edited most of the content of the portal until 2006. He also organized global participatory cyber attacks (DDoS) against NATO's website to protest against the expansion of NATO and wars in the aftermath of 9/11. In 2002, the Department of Defense of Canada and U.S. investigated him through Verisign's intelligence following his global campaign Anti-NATO Day, an event that was covered by international media outlets in Japan and Belarus, and was studied by The Eisenhower Institute in the U.S. through the publication Space Security in 2004.

In the early years of his career, Cirio collaborated with various seminal Internet artists, such as RTMark, and the writers Stewart Home and Bruce Sterling. In addition, he was part of the Italian net.art collective [epidemiC].

Life

He was born in the countryside of Piedmont, Italy in 1979 working as farmer during his childhood and studying art in Turin during his youth. Currently he lives in NYC, while having headquarters in London, UK, Berlin, and Turin, Italy.

Studies

He graduated with a Bachelor of Arts in 2005 in Drama, Art and Music Studies at the University of Turin, Italy. He received a high school qualification in 1999 in Telecommunications and Electronic Systems.

Poetic

Paolo Cirio engages with legal, economic, and semiotic systems of the information society. His works investigate social fields impacted by the Internet, such as privacy, copyright, politics and finance. He shows his research and intervention-based works through prints, installations, videos, and public art.

Paolo Cirio's art practice considers how society is impacted by the distribution, organization, and control of information. It embodies the conflicts, contradictions and potentials inherent to the social complexity of information society through a critical, provocative and proactive approach.

His techniques of exposure, appropriation, and recontextualization of sensitive information and social processes provoke a new way of seeing and understanding modern complex social systems and dynamics. Cirio uses popular language, irony, interventions, and seductive visuals to engage a wide public in critical issues and sophisticated works of art. His works often make contradictions apparent, expose mechanisms, and dispute their processes in order to debunk functions and perceptions of normative systems. Cirio's works of art ultimately propose creative alternatives beyond the socioeconomic critiques they offer.

Cirio is particularly interested in how media and specific arrangements of information influence the creation and perception of cultural, political, and economic realities, as well as personal emotional states, interpersonal relationships, and instinctive human behaviors.

Paolo Cirio artworks are often active agents—they elicit reactions from the subjects of the works and direct participation from the audiences. The interactions and processes from his interventions into social dynamics generate art performances within mediated environments. These socially engaged performances involve the public in critical debates and demand for change driven directly by his artistic concepts and creations, which often embody personal risks and challenges.

His artistic research strives to expand contemporary art into unconventional practices, content, and public. His aesthetic investigations are highly conceptual with layered and interconnected meanings, functions and agents presented as whole closed referential system of interrelated ideas and actions.

Installations

Paolo Cirio's art installations translate the gathering, processing, and dissemination of sensitive information into visual forms for the exhibition setting. Within the space of an art exhibition, Cirio's installations and fine art translate and document sophisticated concepts, public art interventions, or ethereal time-based online performances. With prints, videos, and custom artifacts, the installations present, crystallize, and document ideas, reactions, and contexts of the works taken from its original setting to a formal mode of presentation.

Cirio's fine art condenses critiques of information systems and processes into artworks to visually document and illustrate complex structures and flows examined by his conceptual art. Cirio's installation art combines images, photographs, diagrams, documents, artifacts, and videos to engage a general audience in experiencing and discovering outcomes, circumstances, and significance of his interventions and concepts.
